A boy went crying down the street, And chanced a miser there to meet. My boy, said he, you cry so well, Come tell me what you have to sell. Well, said the boy, if I must say, I sell just what you give away. Why, damn the mill, the miller cried: It faster goes than ever. You re wrong, you re wrong, his man replied, You ought to dam the river. The Sultan s dinner may be spoil d, Unless the helps are quick; And Turkey, after being broil d, Be given to old Nick. Says Poll to Sue, and rear d her crest, And rais d her voice, when you came here, You were so poor and so distress d, You had not got a rag to wear. Sue answer d quick, tis false, you lie; I m scandalized by meddling hags, When first I came tis known that I Had nothing else to wear but rags. written to A feiend who had borrowed the paste pot to mend A paper cap. When you want some more paste You can send here in haste, And be welcome if I have it got: But when you r cap s mended--Now don t be offended--Be so kind as to send back the pot. A burlesque. Who steals my purse, steals trash, For there s but little in it; Tis something, nothing, for I m very poor; Twas mine, tis his, chang d owners...
